Abstract	The increasing competence of religious courts in Indonesia still creates a polemic for its competence of other judiciary institutions. It happens due to the clash of rules and the issuance of Supreme Court circular letter. This paper discusses the solution to the clash of rules and shows the existence of Supreme Court circular letter in the legislation system of Indonesia. This issue will be resolved by statutory approach and conceptual approach. Based on the analysis, the clash of rules can be solved by using lex specialis derogat legit generali principle as lex specialis is religious judicial law and lex generalis is judicial power law. Circular letter is not a form of law; thus, it should not provide conflict.
