Abstract	This research is entitled "Ethical Intervention and Moral Development of Students". The purpose of the study is to compare the moral development of students from Accounting Departments with students of other departments at Economic Faculty Unsoed. The instrument used to measure the moral development of business students was defining issue test (DIT). Research findings indicate that students who have attended ethical class have better moral development as compared to those who have not taken the course. Moreover Accounting students have better moral development as compared to students from other departments. Based on the findings, it is recommended that ethics should be offered to business students since it appears to affect students moral development. In addition, the inclusion of Ethics as a course must be offered to other departments too, as the case of accounting course. Lecturers should provide simulation as a method of teaching in class in order to give better impact on students.
