Abstract	The purpose of the study is to analyze the moral development of students from Accounting Department and Management Department at Economic Faculty Unsoed. This study is a survey with the methods of collecting data using questionnaires. The population is a student at the Faculty of Economics, University of Jenderal Sudirman. The sample was taken by purposive sampling technique and sampling considerations which selected students who are still active in the International Accounting Department and International Management Department. The instrument used to measure the moral development of students was defining issue test (DIT). Research findings indicate that students who have attended ethical class have better moral development as compared to those who have not taken the course. Moreover Accounting students have not better moral development as compared to students from Management Department. Based on the findings, it is recommended that ethics should be offered to economics students since it appears to affect student's moral development. In addition, the inclusion of ethics as a course must be offered to other departments too, as the case of accounting department and management department. Key Words: Ethic, Moral Development, DIT
